Admissions Requirements

Admission to our program is based on academic achievement, prior research experience, other relevant experience, and research interests. Prior research experience and fit with a faculty member are especially important. The personal statement should reflect the applicant's research interests and fit with potential mentors. Letters of recommendation should reflect the applicant's promise as a scholar, academic achievement, and personal qualities that will help them be successful for graduate studies. Application files are reviewed in a holistic manner. Admission to our doctoral program is very competitive. We typically have over 500 applications and will enroll about 20 students a year.
