A degree in Global Studies instills a critical, global outlook that prepares students to engage with pressing questions and to thrive in today's economy. The Bachelor of Arts in Global Studies encourages interdisciplinary study of global issues while promoting cross-cultural perspectives. Students in the program explore complex historical and contemporary relationships and processes that connect the world.

Students will focus on one of four themes: global health, global conflict and security, global sustainability and development, or global cultures. These themes are then applied to one of six world regions: Africa, Asia, Europe, Latin America, Middle East and North Africa, or Russia and Eurasia. Students in the degree program will demonstrate proficiency in a foreign language, allowing them to study, work, travel and conduct research outside the U.S. The program also offers a Leadership in the Global Economy concentration.
