

WOMEN'S AND GENDER STUDIES MINOR

Students who complete a minor in Women's and Gender Studies will be on track to pursue careers in healthcare, law, journalism, business, education, social work, politics and more. Employees with a Women's and Gender Studies background are particularly attractive to employers because they know how to succeed in an increasingly globalizing and diversifying world.

Students who take Women's and Gender Studies courses gain deeper understanding of women and other underrepresented groups through research and community involvement. In addition to gaining skills that translate well into future employment or graduate studies, students learn to think critically, communicate effectively, solve problems, and interpret human experiences with empathy and insight.