

MATHEMATICAL BIOLOGY MINOR

The mathematical biology minor is aimed at students majoring in STEM fields outside of mathematics and provides them with an opportunity to enhance their quantitative and analytical expertise within their primary area of study. This minor is especially relevant to those preparing for careers in life sciences, such as public health, medical research and others. This interdisciplinary curriculum requires core math courses in linear algebra and differential equations and offers electives in biology, biomedical engineering and marine science.