

INTERNATIONAL STUDIES MINOR

The minor in international studies can be applied to a wide range of careers, making it an excellent addition for students pursuing fields such as pre-law, psychology, scientific research, statistics, business, public relations and communications, marketing and more. The minor provides a foundation of concepts crucial to international studies and equips students with writing, analysis and critical thinking skills. Students who pursue this interdisciplinary degree will gain exposure to a variety of perspectives while having flexibility to tailor their coursework to focus on such topics as foreign policy, global economic or environmental studies, or international conflict and cooperation.
